To Whom it May Concern:

My name is Dylan Groves. I am a Professor at Lafayette College (USA) and Researcher at Economic and Social Research Foundation with 10 years of experience conducting field research in economics in Namibia, Nigeria, Mozambique, and Tanzania.

I am writing to endorse Rashid Seif. I have worked with Rashid for several years on research projects across Tanzania, including large-scale randomized controlled trials on women's empowerment in Tanga and a nation-wide experiment on media and governance. Rashid has served as a field officer and a senior field officer on these projects, and on some occasions took over management of data collection in entire regions.

In my work with him, Rashid has been extraordinarily professional, intelligent, hard-working, and easy to work with. Among all surveyors, Rashid stands out as the most impressive mix of smart, capable, and motivated. Rashid gets his own work down on time and at extremely high quality. Even more impressively, he is always looking for ways to make sure that research projects as a whole are successful, whether by supporting his team members, providing feedback, or going the extra mile on his own tasks.

Several examples illustrate what an impressive colleague Rashid has been. First, when we were launching a national field experiment on media and governance, Rashid was extremely helpful in testing and developing survey protocol, and stayed after the training to improve the programming of the survey and make sure that the programming was implemented correctly. When it came time to collect the data, Rashid's regional team was on time and under budget, and I asked his help to complete data collection in other regions when he was finished. Second, Rashid has been extraordinarily helpful in the women's empowerment project that we have been conducting in Tanga for over three years. He began as a field officer, but has quickly become one of the most reliable team members, and we often ask him to pilot special survey modules because we know he will provide excellent feedback and anticipate problems that are likely to occur in the field.

Research by Rashid Seif has contributed to academic research that has been published in academic journals and program feedback that has been presented to implementation partners such as the World Bank and the Tanzanian Government.

I fully endorse Rashid Seif for any position to which he might apply. Please do not hesitate to contact me for additional information or references.

Sincerely,

Dylan Groves
